Reading Comprehension (5 marks)

New Zealand fur seals

Key facts

Location: New Zealand and southern Australian waters

Colour: grey/brown

Length: 1.2–2.5 metres

Weight: 30–180 kilograms

Life span: 15–20 years

Baby fur seals

Seals are mammals. So, like all mammals, baby fur seals (also called pups) drink milk from their mothers. The pups learn to swim in rock pools. Later they swim out in the sea. The pups stay with their mothers for about a year. The pups are then able to leave their mothers and catch fish.

Where do they live?

New Zealand fur seals are found in the waters of New Zealand as well as in the waters south of Australia (see map).

Fur seals were hunted until they were almost totally gone. The good news is that there are now around 100 000 fur seals in Australian and New Zealand waters.

Fur seal or sea lion?

Sometimes fur seals are mistaken for sea lions. But if you look carefully, it is easy to tell them apart. Fur seals have a pointed nose and a thick coat of fur. Sea lions, on the other hand, have a more rounded nose and a thinner coat of fur.

Another big difference is where you find them on land. Fur seals like rocky places, while sea lions like to be on sandy beaches.
